Basic accelerator optics

by K. STEFFEN / DESY

A complete derivation, from first principles, of the concepts and methods applied in linear accelerator and beam line optics will be presented.

Particle motion and beam motion in systems composed of linear magnets, as well as weak and strong focusing and special insertions are treated in mathematically simple terms, and design examples for magnets and systems are given.

This series of five lectures is intended to provide all the basic tools required for the design and operation of beam optical systems.

SPECIAL ENGLISH COURSES FOR THE CHILDREN OF EXPATRIATE PARENTS

Any expatriate parents interested in having their children participate in special English classes of a non-academic nature are invited to contact Mr. E.W. Roebuck (tel. 4005) for further information.

These classes are intended for children of primary school age who have had or will have some exposure to the English language, e.g. through bi-lingual or English-speaking parents, family ties in English-speaking countries, but whose knowledge of English is inexistent or inadequate because of a preponderance of French language and culture.

Some of these children may for instance need to improve their English with a view to entering English language Secondary School either here or in their home countries.

Please note that this announcement is made in response to a private initiative and has no connection with the official CERN programme of Language Courses.
