APPLIED PHYSICS

Space charge problems in accelerators
P. Lapostolle

This series of lectures is intended for young engineers and physicists working in accelerator design and development. It will survey various phenomena associated with space charge effects occurring when trying to increase accelerator-beam intensity. Detailed computational analyses of some of these phenomena will be presented, with the object of both providing useful tools for a deeper understanding of their physical aspects and permitting an easier analysis of experimental observation in order to achieve their compensation whenever possible.
