AUDITORIUM

THE MOLECULAR APPROACH TO BIOLOGY :
ACHIEVEMENTS AND PROSPECTS

by John C. KENDREW

Nobel Prize in Chemistry for 1962

Biographical details

Born in 1917, educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, now a Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge. He is Deputy Chairman of the Medical Research Council Laboratory of Molecular Biology at Cambridge. He is also President of the International Union of Pure and Applied Biophysics, Secretary General of the European Molecular Biology Organization, and Vice-Chairman of the British Council for Science Policy. He shared the Nobel Prize in Chemistry for 1962 with M.F. Perutz for his work on the structure of proteins.

The lecture

Molecular biology lies at the interface between physics, chemistry and biology. I propose to discuss the distinctive nature of its contribution, and why this differs from that of biophysics or biochemistry. I shall also describe how molecular biology has in the past been split into two rather separate schools - the informational school, concerned with the transmission and translation of biological information, and the conformational school, interested in the three-dimensional structures of biological macromolecules. I shall then discuss the recent convergence of these two approaches, and briefly outline some of the scientific problems of the immediate future. Finally I shall make some brief remarks about the difficulties of devising suitable institutional frameworks for the pursuit of this interdisciplinary subject, including some reference to the international activities of the European Molecular Biology Organization.

The conference will be given in English and translated simultaneously into French.
